Lynch Law in Oroville Men Taken Out of Jall and Hanged Brutal

Onoville, Cal., August 23.—Oroville was cursed loat night with one of those terrible cutrages which disgrace civilized communities. C. Oleson was confined to jail for the killing of one M. Logan. His bond had been fixed by the examining magistrate at $2,000, but he had failed to give it, and was still in jail. About two o clock this morning a crowd of men, estimated at from thirty to fifty, surrounded the court house square. Sentinels were posted at each gate. Another body then entered the jailer's room, in the basement, and overpowered him and Mr. Van Vera, who is also under-sheriff, and, after some parley, obtained the keys of the jail and of the cell. But none knew how to use them, and the sheriff absolutely refused to imart the knowledge. Instruments had een prepared, and were then used on the jail door, which was broken open, and afterwards the cell door where Oleson was confined. What then transpired no one dare contemplate. The floor of the cell is covered with blood, and some large stones were found in it. They then took their miserable victim, wounded and bleeding, and begging for mercy, and whose cries were heard by many citizens residing near, from the court house to the derrick at the depot, and there hung him. The appearance of the body shows, so far as any one can judge, that he must have been dead before he had been hung up. In the morning all was quiet.

One of the most surprising things about modern London is the rapidity of its growth. Notwithstanding its already enormous size in 1849, not fewer than 225,322 new houses have been added to it since then, forming sixty-nine new squares, and 5831 new streets, of the total length of 1080 miles.

A correspondent of the Abingdon Virginian, gives this account of a homicide recently committed in Scott county: On Sunday last a prayer meeting was held in the neighborhood of the occurrence, to which all the parties engaged went. Miss Polly A. Hart started home from Miss Polly A. Hart started home from meeting, and before reaching her home was overtaken by Nancy Johnson, when an altercation took place between them, and they got engaged in a fight, when Polly A. Taylor, a daughter of Nancy Johnson, run up behind Polly Hart and stabbed her in the breast with a peaknife, with a blade some three inches long. Polly Hart died in about three-quarters of an hour.
